It can be authoritatively stated by The Evening World that this work of art will be conspicuously absent when President Wilson's party goes aboard

Most of the vessel's former decorations, except those that embodied distasteful reminders of her former nationality, have been restored. In the smokeroom the President will find several excellent paintings and, a thing he will probably consider more important, a real log fire burning in the old fashioned open fireplace.

The George Washington has discarded her coating of dizzy camouflage and will sail out of this port painted a sombre gray.

The ship's battery of four fourpoint-sevens are still on board and in excellent working order. Th Evening World representative was informed to-day by one of the prize gun crews. They will be manned constantly during the entire voyage and will always be ready and willing to throw an explosive projectile six or seven miles in any direction. Her gun crews will conduct themselves as though the war was still on, though in other respects the ship will be operated on a peace basis. She will run brightly lighted every night, but will never wander far from the protecting reach of the Pennsylvanias 15-inch guns and the rapid-fire batteries of the convoying destroyers.

The President and his party need not lack for exercise while crossing the Atlantic. The George Washington's gymnasium has been newly equipped with rowing machines, punching bags, weight machines, ar electrically operated horse with a saddle that gives one the sensation of horseback riding and a horizontal par. If the President wishes to put on the gloves with Secretary Lansing he will find all the equipment at his
